YOUR PRIVACY

It has always been the policy of the Atomic Credit Union not to share nonpublic personal information of its members except as required by law and we will continue to protect your privacy.

PRIVACY DISCLOSURE POLICY

Categories of Information That We May Collect

We collect nonpublic information about our members from the following sources:

- Information received from you on an application or other form, such as: name, address, social security number, assets, and income.
- Information relating to your transactions with us, our affiliates, or others, such as: account balances, payment history, parties to transactions, and credit card usage.
- Information we obtain from a credit reporting agency and/or any other consumer reporting agency, such as: credit worthiness, credit history and previous account history.

Categories of Information That We Disclose

The Atomic Credit Union does not disclose any nonpublic personal information about its members or former members to any person or institution, except as required by law.

Disclosures As Permitted By Law

The Atomic Credit Union may disclose all of the information we collect, as described above to service providers and companies that perform marketing services on our behalf (for example – check printing and loan insurance companies).

Confidentiality / Security

The Atomic Credit Union restricts access to nonpublic personal information about its members to those employees who need to know that information to provide products or services to those members. We maintain physical, electronic, and procedural safeguards that comply with federal standards to guard your nonpublic personal information.

If you ever have questions or concerns about the integrity of your account information, please contact us.
